Short History of Slovene Literature

By F. T. SUHADOLNIK

ROMANTIC AGE 1810-1848 1. What is Romanticism?

At the end of the 18th century there came a new life and a new outlook. Literature is showed itself first as a counter movement to the dry, piecemeal logic and cold fact. Imagination and a play of emotions were again allowed their influence in literature, in art and in music. This movement to new things was characterized as the Romantic Movement.

The phophet and the apostle of the movement was Herder who grew up under the influence of Engish literature giants, Percey, Ossion and Shapespeare and under tthe influence of Homer. In his poetry he pointed to the historical development of languages and with this as a basis he was able to develop a sympathetic understanding of the spirit of language and literature of the past centuries. As a proof of his statements he indicated that the national songs and the folk songs were creations of emotions and fancy rather than of cold and dissecting scientific realism. In his history "Ideen zur Philosphie der Geschichte der Menschheit"he crested a interest in historical backgrounds of the various nations and pointed the way to "complete Humanism." In a separate chapter which he devoted to the Slav nations as the future standard bearers of his ideal Humanism. Contrary to historical facts he paints them as a peace-loving race which has in long ages achieved a high stage of culture and because of their peace-loving they have been subjugated and forced to carry the Tartaris Yolk and what the tartar has not accomplished was done by the Ancient Franks, and the Northern Germans who in grand combination and conspiracy tended to destroy them in part, in which task they have succeeded. Idealistically he says that when order and right rule the hearts of men they will shake off the shakles of slavery and aided by the wealth of their countries, their inherent industry and ingenuity will insure them a happy future. As a conclusion of the chapter he wishes that they collect in the archieves of their nations all the "national customs, songs, tales and that the whole be combined in a glorious history of the nations." Vain as the ideal have proved themselves to be Herder succeeded in awaking an interest for nat tional poetry exemplified by the poems of Vodnik and national history, Sefarik.

Herder's enthusiasm and work was accepted by a class of scholars and was entended by them. National poetry and national literature is the reflection of the national character and past history. To Herder's aesthetic incentive, an interest in scientific work was ideally joined and spread to the research in national languages and history.

Romanticism showed a new path to poetic expression. On the basis of monistic idealism of Fichte and the philosophy of nature by Schelling a completely new path to and new theory of poetry found expression. According to Frederick Schlegel the problem and the duty of romantic poetry was the combination of the essence of modern poetry with the essence of of the poetic soul. All external feeling is united in the ancient classical poetry. Poetry, he maintains, is the external expression or, as it were, the incarnation the poets inner soul and all lives together as an organic whole. "He is anartist who posseses the center of living within himself." Interior life is, therefore, the essence of an artist.

With this ideal Romanticists destroyed the older classification of poetry. To them Romantic poetry was universal poetry. The German romanticists turned to the study of the romance languages (Note: Romance languages are those which find their roots in Latin) especially the works of Petrarch, Dante, Cervantes and other. So interested were they in the literature of the romance languages that they imitated their works. Slav Romanticism the German example.

The moost important function of the Romantic Movement was the awaking of national consciousness. In their strife with Napoleon and the contest against the conquest to the French language, the Germans enthused themselves at the language of their forbears, and became intensely interested in their own literature and their own history and in their national customs and their own characteristics. Frederick Schlegel talked of the love of country, of language and of the glorious past of the nation as its greatest good. He maintained that every nation has an inherent right to its literature and that it is a barbaric gesture to be taught and instructed in a foreign (French) language. "A nations that suffers and has its language imposed by foreign influence must in time become barbaric and a nation that permits its history to be taken from it loses the stantion of spiritual liberty" These ideas served as the basis of the Romantic movement among the Slavs.

It must not be imagined that the Romantic Movement arose over night and that success was immen It was sowed and it grew many years before came what it eventually grew to the influence ssessed later.

2. SEA SERPENT SEASON

Spring is the time when verse and sea serpents rival each other for editorial attention. We may expect the customary wastebasket attention to budding poets but front-page space for the annual "sighting" of sea serpents along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Again an expedition to snare one of the elusive sea creatures loving minds. The Chancellor-Stuart Field Museum expedition spent part of a year hunting sea serpents in the South Seas as well as reticulated pythons on land. The sum total of the efforts stood: reticulated pythons, 1; sea serpents, 0.

Sea serpent is the name given to monstrous snake-like creatures believed by many to live in the ocean. They are now retual sea serpents are small tropical waters.

The accounts left by probable. early Norsemen abound in stories of sea serpents several hundred feet in length and about 20 feet in circumference. Olaus Magnus, writing in 1555, described such a monster which, he said, not only ate calves, sheep and swine, but also "disturbs ships, rising up like a mast, and sometimes snaps some of the men from the deck." These stories were generally believed during the 17th century, according to Erick Pontoppidan.
