Short History of Slovene Literature

By F. T. SUHADOLNIK

Some of the conditions that were effective in the beginning of the 17th century were also in effect in the 18th. The priests were the main force who interested themselves in the literary field. Though now the Discalceled monks, instead of the Kapuscins and the Jesuits, whose forces Franciscans and some recular priests joined.

Father Marko Pohlin, the pioneer of this era, was born at Ljubljana, in 1735. At the age of twelve he went to school at the monastery school at Mariabrunn near Vienna. With the completion of the Theological studies he returned to Ljubljana where the Discalceled Monks had a monastery of St. Joseph. Here he remained as the vicar until 1774 when he was called to the Seminary at Vienna as a professor of theology. He returned to Ljubljana in 1781 where he was a subprior until 1784. He went to Mariabrunn where he died in Very active as a man of literature Father Pohlin's first work was the primer "Abecednika" published in Ljubljana in 1765, which however, is not preserved. This was shortly followed with the "Kraynska Grammatika" published in German. With this work Pohlin wished to establish the foundation for the Slovene language. He, however, did all of his reform as an individual who was not too particular to keep the old forms of the Protestant literary men whose forms were correct though not the latest. In the main his language is phometically the language of the Slovenes of Ljubljana. He did not consider the traditional forms and etymology that have been introduced by Trubar and Bohorcic. His reforms included even the changing of the characters of Bohorcic. He wished to change the f and fh to s and sh. For s and sh he substituted f and fh. These changes did not last long for he was violently attacked by some of his contemporaries.

His other changes and introductions were good and he made some constructive additions to the language. He was the first to find the gender endings of words ending in o - a and -i. He introducted the locative and the instrumental cases and brought the Vocative and Ablative from the Latin. The most important part of the grammar is devoted to discussion of poetic expression and to the forms of poetry. In themselves they are practically worthless. Theiretically Pohlin could not distinguish between metre and accent and in his versification he was strongly influenced by the German rennaisance Poets especially Gottsched As a result are written in hexameters and alenandrian meter. The his book as a book is practically worthless it served to kindle a desire to creat Slovene poetry in some of the contemporaries. His book really was the cause of the increased interest and the success of the first S'ovene Poet Valentine Vodnik.

In the later editions of the Grammar, Pohlin add ed a small dictionary which contains some very good verbal additions to the language while there are also many words that show poor invention or adaptation.

Pohlin began the first scientific method of teaching literature and grammar. As practical aids to the study of language he wrote books of a practical nature. The first of his books was 'Bukuvze fa rajtengo' a very elementary arithmetic: he edited Becker's "Kmetom sa potrebo in pomozh" in which he included a map of the Slovene places and Slovene localities. Nor was all of his educational work of a very practical nature in 1788 he published the entertaining book of conundrums and riddles under the title 'Kratkozhasne uganke od Petra Kumrasa."

Active as he was in the field of practical education he was even more active in religious publications. His sermons, legends, Mass and prayer books, translation of Kanizius' catechism are especially numerous. Some he translated into the German. The Slovene chronocle that he intended to publish remained in manuscript, his bibliography of Slovene publications was published only after his death first as an appendix to the fourth volume of the catalog publication of the Academy of Maria Theresa and in 1862 it appeared under separate cover as the printing of a Ljubljana

Though Pohlin's grammar was wanting in many things and his grammatical knowledge very superficial, his enthusiasm and his activity in the literary circles and his love of the motherland and mothertongue gained for him many friends upon whom his influence made a telling mark.

The poetic rennaisance of this period can be laid as a tribute to his interest in poetry. With his grammar and also verbal enthusiasm he encouraged his monastic brothers and friends in a real interest in poetry and poetic expression. His work was so fruitful that when he was leaving Ljubljana in 1775, Valentine Vodnik, then a young man, read his first poetic production in Father Marko Pohlin's honor the "Milo Pesem" as a farewell piece.

The enthusiasm of Marko Pohlin was contagious and soon other monks took up his work with great enthusiasm. A discalceled monk, Father John Damascene Dev began the gathering of poetry of the period and publishing it under the title "Skupspravljanje krajnskih PISSANIZ od lepih umetnosti" as an annual publication. The first appeared in 1779 and others in 1780, and 1781. The annual poetical anthology was made possible under pressure of the Franco-German Almanacs.

Paris began the Almanac movement when the first "Almanac des muses" appeared in 1765. German poets and publishers grasped the French idea and they themselves issued a 'Mussenalmanach" at Gottingen and Lipsic. With this humble beginning there was soon a whole line of similar efforts. The most interesting in Slovene literature is the one that was published at Vienna in 1777. Important because from the Vienna almanac it is very likely that the Slovenes got their idea.

The Austrian poets were many steps behind the ·German poets and while Goethe was already turning out masterpieces the Austrian poets still labored with the pastoral poetry of the Rococo age. The examples that were copied very apishly were the poems of Gellert. Hagedorn and Gleim. At the head of the antiquated form movement was Michael Dennis a pupil of Klopstock and Ossian, the court bard of Maria Theresa and Blumauer and Alxinger, pupils of Weiland. Their 'names are therefore intimately connected with the Wiener Mussenalmanach from the years 1777 - 1795.

These facts are mentioned because of the influence the poets of Vienna had upon the Slovene poetical efforts. It is very probable that the Slovenes became acquainted with the Almanac through the medium of Marko Pohlin who was at the Seminary in Vienna at the time. Contents of the Slovene Almanac "Pissanic" do not exceed the quality of the poets Hagedorn, Gellert and Gleime and the later addition

Most of the contributions to the Pissan Maying his i. were anonymous. In the first edition are found narrative poems written in Hexameters, distichs and Alexandrian meter, written after the style of Dennis The poems praise the noble queen Maria Theresa Joseph II besides there are verses of praise for Pohlm grammar and praise of his work. Later editions the almanac included some lyrics written in simp stanzas, the best of which is Vodnik's "Sadov Krajnz." Characteristic of the narrative poems of later editions is that they do not praise so much as the moralize. Other poems of the later editions inc mottos and epigrams and some translations from

The music for it was written by Jocob Zupan. Poetic excellence the poems of the yearly autili ogies was poor and practically worthless. However the publications served a more useful purpose the the sole publication of poems. Practice and the hand ling of Slovene words was the main function of efforts for the Slovene language, as well as any la guage must obtain some grace and adapted to so motion before it can be adopted for literary an po expression. This service the Pissanice served aptly. Besides this primary function the Pissan also served to establish some rules and principles poetic motion, meter and rhythmn. Some of the ished poems had neither while others showed the fluence of the German, Italian or even the Class meters and forms.

Into the circle of literary men of Pohlin's time Dizma Zakotnik, a Discalceled monk, must also fille place for he was responsible for the first collection of national songs which included some famous poor that have come down thru the centuries are pard from generation to generation mostly by w mouth.
